VALUE OF A WELL STOCKED WORKBASKET

A Good-Looking Wicker Basket Can Be Bought Very Cheaply.

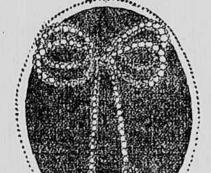

The good needle woman should possess her own work basket stocked with everything she can possibly require. I am a great believer in the useful little work basket on stands—they are fitted with trays also, and a handle, and are light and easy to carry about A wicker-work basket can be bought cheaply.

itself you can keep in the centre of the basket.

I always like to have two pairs of scissors in my work basket—one long pair for cutting out and one small pair for cutting out and one small pair for cutting threads and unpicking. I am never without a good silver thimble—a silver thimble wears so much better than the ordinary metal ones.

Then I have a good supply of needles, also, keeping an assortment of various sizes from five to twelve. Besides and crewel needles. I keep these in a handy little needle case, which I made myself. I always have an emery cushion also on which to polish the needles when they get rusty.

Then I keep about four reels of white cotton in different numbers in one of the side pockets of the baskets, two

Some of the table syrups come in this that have an inset cap top. Keep all you get of these—even ask your friends for them, and after you have washed the labels off and carefully dried them paint the outsides white with enamel. When this is dry print on them with black paint "tea," "coffee," "ginger," "alspice," "cinnamon," etc., until you have enough neat tins to put your groceries in when you give a fresh order, which is generally very large. Your pantry will thus be kept tidy and attractive. Pale blue enamel, or any color preferred, may be substituted for the white.

MORE ABOUT CAPES

Some of Them Might Be Almost Any-thing Else.

Some of Them Might Be Almost Anything Else.

The cape, with all its variations, is the fancy of the moment. We see it everywhere, and it is worn with any toilette, writes a Faris correspondent. It is difficult to say too much in its favor, for it is certainly one of the prettiest novelties of the season. We have the Cyrano cape, the Henri II, cape, the court mantle, the Watteau cape, the Manon mantelet, the Brittany mantle; in fact, capes of all epochs, all styles, and all countries have been brought under contribution.

The majority of our woolen dresses, as well as our silk dresses, are finished with a cape, longer or shorter and more or less full, which has its own peculiar arrangements of bretelles or collar. Some models have a cape at the back and a coat at the front, and we ask ourselves: "Is it a cape or a coatee?" The effect of such a surprise is quite novel.

Other capes are held only by shoulder straps, bretelles or bands, which are fastened to the shoulders by large buttons.

Your Badge Sent.
Dear Editor.—I am going to try and be a faithful member in the future, though I have no idea I'll win a medal. Haven't we had a lot of nice rain lately? We had such a hard one Sunday that I went out and paddled in it. Wednesday I went out and paddled in it. Wednesday I went out and paddled in it. Wednesday I went out in the morning. Of nourse, on plenics you're hungry right straight, so we ate dinner pefore 12 o'clock. We rode on the hobby-horses until we got tired. I am just learning how to skate. Such falls I've got, though only one hurt. Alvin Hattor's poem certainly was good. Can't Rebecca Cooper write nice stories? I think they are beautiful. Please send me another badge, as I've misplaced my other one.

Yours lovingly.
